

Cleveland State University partners with Chinese university, which will send students to CSU

CLEVELAND, Ohio — Cleveland State University and the South China University of Technology have established a partnership through which Chinese students will come to CSU to complete their education and receive joint degrees.

The agreement is to be signed Friday by officials from both universities. It culminates a two-year effort to link the Chinese university with CSU's Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, said its dean Edward (Ned) Hill. He credited the college's consistent ranking among the top schools of urban affairs for launching the partnership.

"There is a high degree of ranking consciousness going on (in China)," Hill said.

Yizhong Zhu, a professor at South China, came to CSU to study urban affairs as a visiting professor about four years ago because of its national ranking, Hill said. She helped CSU develop a relationship with her home university.

Hill visited the university in Guangzhou, China, in April 2011 to work on a joint program. While there, he was appointed an adjunct professor of public administration.

South China had established a Sino-North American College and chose students, based on academics and ability to speak English, while they were in high school. The college has tracks in public management and hospitality management, Hill said. About 20 students studying public management are expected to enroll at CSU in the fall of 2013.

An unknown number of students from South China's College of Public Administration also are expected, he said.

Hill said the Chinese university was motivated by several factors to arrange what is known as a 2 + 2 agreement, he said.

"A large number of Chinese students are going directly to American universities and they want to maintain contact with their students," he said. "It distinguishes them in the educational market. And the university is in a city that is very nervous about economic transition. They are looking at Ohio as a place going through transition."

Hill said it is expected that the Chinese students will pay out-of-state tuition.

CSU administrators said the urban affairs college could keep the difference between the in-state and out-of-state tuition cost per Chinese student to help fund CSU faculty and student exchanges to China, he said.
